You are probably aware that the advent of warm weather bas given a great impetus to business-not that we were idlebut we do say that trade shows the effect of Old Sol beaming upon it. because a week ago the trade seemed to know but one thing, and that was that they ought to go to Harris' and buy a suit, but it was horses' work to learn from them what they wanted. They were irresolute, hesitating between a fur coat and a linen duster, but now "a change comes o'er," etc.—they know what they want and ask for it. It is "a cheap (cheap first) good summer suit," and they know where to get it.

We sometimes wonder what gives occasion for people to remark, "Why. Harris, your store is the only one in town that seems to be doing any business." We might tell them with some degree of truth that the reason therefor lay in the fact that we work harder for trade, we give greater inducements to trade and show a better selected stock than any house in Helena or the territory. Now, one of the special inducements we offer is our line of medium priced suits. A man of ordinary intelligence is aware that it is not a feat worthy of mention to sell low priced goods at low prices, but IN ANY AMOUNT. it is a point worthy of consideration to sell good, durable articles, and at low prices. It is the tricksters' favorite game to cut in price, parade the fact with loud noise and a flourish of trumpets, and at the same time conceal the fact that he is cutting in quality, also. We are forced to these remarks by the host of imitators who, see ing the result of our popular priced suits have marked goods matched them in quality. We will show them a trick worth two like that before the season is over; but in the meantime we just a few of those 'Ten Dollar Suits left, some sixty three in all. Now, as a matter of fact they will be gone by the end of the week, so anyone wanting tnem had better pile in as soon as the announcement is made, or they will all be gone.

The Horsethief Alleged to Be Con- friendship. T. P. O'Connor, an active nected With the Cronin Murder Tells a New Story.

Mistake in Dates Which Gives the Whole Narrative a Very Fishy Flavor.

An Allegation that Alex. Sullivan Paid the Rent for the Carlson Cottage for Williams.

CHICAGO. June 17 .- All previous confes sions of Woodruff, the horse thief, who has been indicted for complicity in the Cronin tragedy, were eclipsed yesterday by an entirely new story from him published in the Times. He contradicts and discussion of the contradicts and discussion of Times. He contradicts and discredits every other statement heretofore attributed afterwards released, but is under surveilto him, and now appears in the role of an lance. to him, and now appears in the role of an ex-member of the Canadian militia, claiming that he was trusted by Cronin's alleged murderers because he furnished Fenian spies with valuable information during one of the military raids into Canada.

Immediately after the discovery of Cronins body O'Sullivan sice house and Carlson's cottage were photographed. Martin Burke, who was standing near the ice house at the time was inadvertently photographed. This same Burke is now said to be under arrow at Winnipper on the charge of being spies with valuable information during one of the military raids into Canada. Woodruff says he arrived in Chicago March 26 and obtained work from a gardener on Southport avenue, not far from the Carlson cottage. After three or four days' work for the gardener, Woodruff was taken siek. His narrative says: "With the intention of going to the county hospital, I drifted into O'Sullivan's place. I made up my mind he was a Fenian, and reminded him of certain scenes during the Fenian raid into Canada. I went over during that raid as a volunteer in the Twenty-fourth Kent Battalion, whose headquarters were at Chatham. We went as far as Niagara. At that time I was assigned to the adjutant's department, and gave to some Fenian spies, who came to our camp, such points as I learned while in that place. That was my first connection with the Clan-na-Gael. O'Sullivan told me he would get me work, if possible. From there I came down town and went to work in Dean's livery stable." Woodruff tells how he met Detective Coughlin soon after and had a drink with him. He conveyed the impression that Coughlin knew him to be a thief, and with him. He conveyed the impression that Coughlin knew him to be a thief, and pool. Burke has retained counsel and is that Coughlin knew him to be a thief, and that he believed the detective to be a "fence." While walking together they met O'Sullivan and the latter mentioned Woodruff's request for employment. Coughlin quizzed Woodruff, that a man in his line snould want work and Woodruff, then told of meeting, early in April, one Melville, whom he had known in California. Melville, he said, was a great friend of Desmend and "Sand Lot" Kearney during the labor troubles there. Melville and Detective Coughlin were drinking together in a south side saloon and Woodruff joined them. Coughlin soon left and the other two made the rounds of the disreputable houses for a while, after which Melville took leave, saying he was stopping at McCoy's hotel. Melville gave Woodruff a small sum of money and said he wanted to see him again in a few days. Afterward Woodruff met Coughlin on the north side talking with a man whom Woodruff calls McDougall. He claims McDougall told him his name was now Williams. Woodruff had known McDougall or Williams as an old worker for the Clanna-Gael. After a miyate interview between determined not to voluntarily return to the determined not to voluntarily return to the states. He denies all knowledge of or complicity in the Cronin matter, and asserts that he is merely making a trip to Ireland via. Winnipeg. He refuses to say anything farther or to see any person other than his counsel. The police have been instructed by the Chicago authorities to hold him by all means, as he is a principal. All the marks on Burke's linens and books, and the papers found on his person, had been obliterated. A name on the band of a hat found in his valise, resembling that of Cronin, had been smeared over with that of Cronin, had been smeared over with

CHICAGO, June 17.—When Chief Hubbard was asked for an explanation of the arrest of Burke at Winnipeg, he said, "It is a very important arrest, and will be followed by another in this city."

The police consider the capture of Martin Burke in Winnipeg the most important yet made. He has been identified as the man who hired the furniture moved from Clark street, opposite Dr. Cronin's office, to the Carlson cottage, where Cronin was killed. Burke is a hot-headed Clan-na-Gael man, and comes from Hancock, Mich., where Detective Coughlin used to live. He liams as an old worker for the Clan-na-Gael. After a private interview between Coughlin and Williams, the latter took Woodruff to the west side and talked with where Detective Coughlin used to live. He him. When Woodruff told Williams he was "busted," the latter said "Why don't you go down and see Alexander Sullivan?" Woodruff replied he was not ready to be sent to Europe. The pair then proceeded to 117 Clark street. This is the place where, as has been frequently published, the furniture of the Carlson cottage was first stored. Williams would not tell Woodruff what he wanted him to do, but preded him a few days later to go over and hen Woodruff told Williams he was Thursday. The arrest is made on a tele-graphic description sent out at once. Chief Hubbard says this capture comes nearer to the actual murderer than any yet made.

gave his age when arrested as 26 years. The last Fenian invasion of Canada occurred about 1366. This would make Woodruff about 3 years old when, according to his own story, he was a member of the Canadian militia and first became intimate with the Fenians.

Canadian militia and first became intimate with the Fenians.

Woodruff was visited in jail in the afternoon and found deeply engrossed in the preparation of another confession, which, he says, is to be much more sensational than any of the preceding ones. He reiterated the above confession, but on close examination altered it in many important particulars. He said he was only 29 years old, but insisted that he took an active part in the Fenian rebellion, which, he says, occurred in 1873. His date does not agree with history. He said he visited the Woodruff replied yes, and Sullivan said he had nothing to say; that he had never met Woodruff before. Woodruff told him he was looking for a joh, and on Sullivan asking him what kind of work he would like, he replied: "Anything in God's world, if there is any money in it." Sullivan looked at him sharply and replied: "If livan, wife of Alexander Sullivan, of Chicago, is spending a few days with friends with the Cronin mystery, her knowledge of the rime sustains her. So far as the sensation relates to her husband, she says she sees in it. Chicago newspaper rot, composed partly of antiquated calum. in London. She says while she is deeply relates to her husband, she says she sees in it. Chicago newspaper rot, composed partly of antiquated calumnies whose untruth was shown years ago, partly of malignant aspersions of personal and political enemies, whose motives the Chicago editors do not appreciate. She deeply deplores Cronin's death and says the presumption that her husband had a personal interest in his death rests upon an error which for a time may seem to justify the censure. This error will be perfectly shown hereafter. Those who now condemn her husband will generously acknowledge his patience and fortitude. an looked at him sharply and replied: "If hear of anything for you. I'll let Williams know of it." Williams know of it."

Next day, on the North side, when in company with Williams, they met Sullivan. He took Williams on one side and handed him money, saying "Now pay that rent." Then, seeing Woodruff, Sullivan told him he must not take offense at his told him he must not take offense at his manner on the previous day, as he was very busy and had a great many applications for jobs. Wednesday before the murder Woodruff met Coughlin, who asked him to take a note over to Sullivan. This note was in cipher, the same as had been used by the Fenians when Woodruff was at Niagara. He looked at it and says it read, "Going up to P. O'Sullivan's."

The remainder of the confession deals mainly with the night of the murder, and Coughlin, so Woodruff alleges, paid him twenty-five dollars to bring to Lincoln avenue from Dean's livesy stable a conveyance in which a trunk could be carried. Near Ashland and Lincoln avenues Melville and a man named livesy stable a conveyance in which a trunk could be carried. Near Ashland and Lincoln avenues Melville and a man named O'Shea, alias Mike McDougall, joined Woodruff. The latter says this man was a machinest or blacksmith from Philadelphia, but that he had known him in Witchita, Kas. Melville, he said, he had also met before in Peoria, in connection with Irish affairs. They drove out to the Carlson cottage, reaching there about 2 a. m. The two men went in and soon after P. O'Sullivan, Melville and Williams came out carrying a trunk which they placed in the wagon. Here follows a new version of the ride with the trunk and the disposal of the body in the sewer. Woodruff now says the intention was to have the trunk sunk in Lake Michigan, off Lincoln park but thinking they were pursued the plan was abandoned. Woodruff claims that Cronins instrument case was probably buried or thrown into the Lake by Melville and Williams when they left the wagon in the woods for a short time. He does not know what disposition was made of the clothing. Woodruff concludes with the assertion that he has recently been approached by a lawer who offered to take his case gratutiously and that this lawyer had to keep strict silence, as he and Alexander Sullivan's attorney would work in unison and that one of Sullivans bondsmen had agreed to pay for Woodruff's defense. The climax of the whole "confession," is an assertion by Woodruff that all his previous alleged "confessions" are bogus and that this is "the first and only statement I have made since my arrest." The intimation being that the other "confessions" were given circulation by interested persons to create the impression that he (Woodruff) was a liar. Woodruff gave his age when arrested as 25 years. PINE RIDGE AGENCY, Dak., June 17.—

A council was held this afternoon, at which Old-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horse, Red Cloud, Little Wound, Blue Horse, Young-Cloud, Little Wound, Blue Horse, Young-Man-Afraid of-His-Horse and other chiefs spoke. Their talk was a rehearsal, each of their own individual views, as to the treaty of 1868, which has not been fulfilled. When they had finished Major Warner explained the provisions very much in the same way as at Rosebud and in addition explained part of the bill in reference to paying Red Cloud for his ponies, and told them to be careful of any man who wanted to get any of this of any man who wanted to get any of this money; that advice from such men was not worth much; that while he thought it was for the interest of all of them that the bill should be accepted, still the commissioners wanted them to do as each thought best. He concluded by saying the bill was ready for signatures. No Flesh was the first to sign. About forty signed in twenty minutes, when further action was deferred until evening. until evening.

occurred in 1873. His date does not agree with history. He said he visited the flats at 117 Clark street April 20, when the fact is the flat was vacated by the mysterious stranger March 22. Woodruff's statement that he met Melville April 2 and that the latter was stopping at McCoy's hotel, is met by the hotel register, which shows Melville left there March 29. Woodruff further said this afternoon that he was with Dr. Cronin and Sullivan the night of and previous to the murder of the doctor. This conflicts with his morning confession, in which he says he played cards all that evening. When asked why he told this last story, after having told so many others, Woodruff replied: "Well, I was promised the influence of a great paper in my behalt."
